Description:

A Hat in Time is a very fun 3D platformer. Part of its appeal is that it controls similar to old 3D platformers like Mario 64. It has a bright, colorful setting and has a good sense of humor, even in the darker parts of the game. The main goal of the game is to collect 40 hourglasses, some of which are pretty hard to obtain. You don't need all the hourglasses to beat the game, but to progress to the next world you need to get a certain amount first. The game stays unique throughout the playthrough by introducing new hats with differing functions that are all necessary to progress and different badges you can purchase to make your playthrough easier or harder. This game is very enjoyable and I would highly recommend you try it yourself because nothing I tell you will truly do it justice.

Favorite or Least Favorite Part:

My favorite part of the game was the final level. It puts everything the game taught you to the test, and the final battle is pretty challenging. I won't spoil it, but it is very fun and climactic.
