Description:

Spirited Away is enjoyable for all ages. A coming of age film of sorts, it takes heavy influence from Japanese mythology. Chihiro finds herself stuck in the spirit world and unable to help her parents, who have turned into pigs. She makes new friends and encounters spirits both good and bad, but none truly evil and truly pure. With help from a boy named Haku she tries to rescue her parents while learning about independence, morality, and togetherness along the way. This movie is a good way to teach children about the right way to act and consequences for misdeeds, while also teaching about sacrifice and friendship.

Favorite or Least Favorite Part:

My favorite part of Spirited Away is seeing Chihiro try and save Haku. It emphasizes the types of mutually beneficial and loving relationships kids should be exposed to.
