Khan academy is a great source to get ready for the SAT. It connects to your College Board account(if you have one) and examines your SAT grade to figure out how to help you. Personally the questions that Khan academy gave me were the questions I was having the most trouble with. First, Khan Academy "taught" me the topic which would be like in a video format and then it gave me example questions. If I got stuck on a question it gave me hints and when I got the question incorrect it showed me step by step how to solve the question correctly. Moreover, I think that it is important to realize that Khan Academy also has a really nice part to it which is that it could create a practice schedule for you, so if you want to practice everyday at a specific time you could set it up to send you notifications when the time you want to practice for comes. This is especially important for students that can't organize their schedule and fit in practice time.
